

Unemployment on the rise during Obama's Summer of Recovery

Dear Fellow Conservative,

Two months ago, President Obama proclaimed this summer the "Summer of Economic Recovery," insisting that his $862 billion stimulus bill has yet to make its biggest impact and that we've "turned the corner" on the economy.

But where is the proof behind the president's statement? Labor Day is almost here and there has not been one tangible sign of economic improvement over the last 60 days. If anything, we see data that points to a more severe economic situation than predicted. Last week, new unemployment claims rose to 479,000, with another 19,000 Americans losing their jobs in just one week.

That does not sound like progress to me! And neither does it to those 19,000 Americans and their families that are now struggling to put food on the table!

So I ask President Obama to please show us where exactly the recovery has been.

The stimulus bill failed miserably, yet the White House continues to credit it with having a positive impact on the economy and saving thousands of jobs across the country. But it's clear to anyone with a good business sense that the White House's propaganda is just plain wrong. Small businesses are the backbone of America, and only when they have the financial security to begin hiring in extensive numbers will economic stability return. And that will only happen when President Obama and the Democratic Congress finally realize that it's the private sector that creates real jobs, not the government.

America's economic recovery and the restoration of jobs will not be a result of government spending or taxpayer-funded bailouts, but rather private industry being relieved of high taxes and backbreaking government regulations. Skyrocketing corporate taxes have crippled the private sector and slowed economic growth for the second straight quarter.

The Obama Administration has failed to fix the economy because their strategy is to grow the size of the government and raise our taxes to pay for it. Fiscal conservative policies of small government, low taxes and minimal regulations are the answer to America's economic troubles. Unless we want to spiral into a double dip recession - an economic crisis that could put future American prosperity in jeopardy - we must act now. Restoring our conservative values in Washington this fall is imperative. That's why I'm asking you to make an investment in my campaign today. An investment in my campaign is an investment in your future.

The only unemployment claims that should be filed in the next several months are those of the Members of Congress who have yet to get our economy on track. They should be the only unemployed Americans.

I will go to Washington to make sure that federal policies reflect the tried-and-true free market principles that brought past generations wealth and security. I will also make sure that government spending and control is brought under control so that our small businesses are free to thrive and turn profits. I hope I can count on you to help me get there by following this link to make the most generous contribution you can afford today.

P.S. So much for President Obama's "Summer of Economic Recovery!" New unemployment claims continue to grow and economic growth has once again stalled. It's time to restore our conservative values in Washington and stop government from preventing economic growth.
